Foreword

The bathroom is one of the first places we enter in the morning and often the last before we go to sleep. Here we start our day—with water, light, and a little moment for ourselves. And precisely because we spend so much time in this room, it's worth giving it a little more attention.

In this small overview, we take you on a journey through various interior styles—from the cozy country house bathroom to the clear, modern design and romantic or creative variations. Each style has its own atmosphere, materials, colors, and ideas that can make the bathroom a special place—whether you are just redecorating or simply in the mood for inspiration.

Perhaps you'll discover a style that suits you perfectly. Perhaps you'll feel inspired to make some changes or simply to look at things differently. In any case, we wish you much joy in reading, browsing, and dreaming—and many beautiful moments in your very own bathroom.

„ A summer morning “

My first project as a newly graduated interior designer was precisely a bathroom—and one in a Mediterranean style. I still remember that day vividly: My hands were shaking with excitement as I presented the designs to the client for the first time. The space was small, but I was determined to capture the feeling of sun, sea, and vacation in it. So I opted for warm, sandy-colored walls, hand-painted tiles from Spain in turquoise and cobalt blue, an open shower with a natural stone floor, and a large mirror with a driftwood frame.

I had even planned a niche for olive oil soaps and fragrant lavender sachets—a small homage to my own travels to the Mediterranean. When the builder first entered the construction site, he smiled broadly and said, 'It feels like summer vacation here every day.' That was the moment I realized how much interior design can evoke emotions—and that a bathroom can be more than just tiles and fixtures. Since then, for me, the Mediterranean bathroom is not just a style but also an invitation: an invitation to take life a little easier—like a warm breeze on a summer morning.

Country House Romance

Natural & Timeless

There are places that feel like a quiet promise of warmth, security, and a return to what is essential. The country house romantic style is just such a place—an interior design style that does not follow trends but instead moods, memories, and the quiet beauty of simplicity. "Natural & Timeless"—this "is no coincidence but rather an attitude: caring, honest, and grounded. The country house romanticism thrives on natural materials and soft colors. Wood with character, ceramics with small irregularities, and woven fabrics in linen and cotton qualities. It is the little things that make this style so special: a delicately patterned curtain, a flowered jug with fresh meadow flowers, and a curved faucet in a brass look. Everything appears unpretentious, yet never boring—for in this calm lies its true power.

In the bathroom, country house romance unfolds an atmosphere reminiscent of fragrant herb gardens, babbling village fountains, and handmade soap. Here, keepsakes are allowed to have a place, and a window can open up a view of the apple tree in the garden. Nothing is artificial—everything thrives on authenticity and loving selection. The space does not have to be perfect. It should invite you to breathe deeply. Time seems to flow more slowly here. Perhaps because it doesn't have to be loud to make an impact. Perhaps because the heart simply feels at home in such spaces. Country house romance is not a style for the hurried—it is for people who live with open senses. Seeing the beauty in patina, the poetry in silence. Welcome to the world of country house romance—natural, timeless, and full of heart.

Wood & Harmony

This country-style bathroom exudes a charming blend of rustic warmth and understated elegance—a space that is both a retreat and a stylish statement. The centerpiece of the room is undoubtedly the large crystal chandelier that cascades from the ceiling. Arranged in multiple levels, the clear glass crystals with their cascading waterfall effect resemble sparkling raindrops in the morning light. The chandelier captures the incoming daylight and refracts it into delicate reflections that dance playfully across the walls, giving the room a gentle movement.

At the center stands proudly a freestanding oval bathtub, whose metallic-brown exterior forms an elegant contrast to the radiant white interior. Its classic slipper style with gently curved edges gives it a romantic touch—almost as if it were in an old country house, telling stories from long ago. Directly next to it, on the left side of the room, there is a massive wooden washstand in a light oak finish. Its numerous drawers and small doors offer ample storage space and emphasize the functional yet lovingly designed character of the room. Above the washbasin hang two rectangular mirrors with simple black frames, giving the ensemble a fine line and clear structure.

A tall wooden display cabinet with glass doors stands right next to the washbasin and serves as a stylish storage place for towels or elegant flacons. The right wall is adorned with a collection of twelve circular, antique-looking mirrors arranged in a neat grid, reflecting the light anew each time. The large window with its floor-length beige curtains opens the room to nature and offers a view of green treetops. On the light beige tiled floor, a small metallic vase subtly sparkles, adding understated elegance. Thus, the bathroom becomes a place where country house coziness and fine details merge in perfect harmony.

White Poetry

The bathroom in the style of White Poetry is a place where tranquility and softness set the tone. As soon as you enter, you are enveloped by a bright, almost ethereal atmosphere: a bathroom entirely in white and beige, which is both timelessly classic and full of delicate details. The walls are clad with white wooden panels that create a gentle texture and give the room a warm coziness. The panels remind one of old country houses, the scent of freshly painted walls, and the creaking of old floorboards.

At the center is a freestanding wooden washbasin, painted white, with fine carved details on the drawers and legs that resemble little poems. Each ornament seems to tell a story—of craftsmanship and loving design. The delicate carvings make the piece of furniture appear almost like an heirloom passed down from generation to generation.

Above the washbasin hangs a mirror in an antique-looking frame, its patina gleaming slightly golden and gently reflecting the morning light. The nostalgic fittings in old brass echo this play of light and time, adding warm accents that harmoniously blend with the white of the room.

White hydrangeas in a stone vase adorn a small console next to the washbasin. Their lush blossoms resemble the turned pages of a collection of poems, gentle and full of lightness. Their fragrance mingles with the cool freshness of the morning, adding a sensual note to the room.

The floor is laid with cream-colored tiles that shimmer in the light like delicate silk. A soft bath mat in warm ivory invites the feet to enjoy the coolness of the tiles. Light filters through a window adorned with white, semi-transparent curtains, dancing on the tiles and filling the bathroom with a calming brightness. This bathroom is a poem in white: classic, soothing, and bright. Here, one can take a deep breath, find peace, and forget the world outside for a moment. A space like a quiet retreat—created for the gentle hours of the day.
